THE RESULT.

"Royal" the only Absolutely Pure and Wholesome Baking Powder Made.

The following Professors of Chemistry and Food Analysis certify that they have carefully examined the Royal Baking Powder in making comparative tests with other baking powders of the market:

[illegible]

The Royal is of the highest strength and absolutely pure and wholesome. It contains only those ingredients necessary to make a perfect baking powder.

The Royal Baking Powder is greatly superior in being entirely free from lime, an injurious adulterant found in all other baking powders yet examined, sometimes in quantity as large as twelve per cent of their entire weight.

The Royal Baking Powder is, in fact, the only absolutely pure baking powder made.

LEADERS OF LOW PRICES FOR RELIABLE GOODS!

SPECIAL SALE OF SEASONABLE GOODS.

It is well known we are not in the habit of resorting to sensational advertising or misrepresenting facts. At present we have decided to offer our stock of goods without waiting for the end of the season, at such prices as a combination of circumstances justify us in stating are lower than the same goods have ever been sold. In doing so we adhere to our principles, and will only name a few goods from some of the departments; nor do we undertake to mention the cheapest goods in stock. We are selling unwanted articles just as cheap. We further state that in our opinion DRY GOODS are now at the lowest point they will be for years. Already many of the mills, the products of which we offer, are stopped, being unable to continue manufacturing at the prices. This refers not only to American-made goods, but in a greater degree to goods made in Great Britain and on the Continent of Europe. Please preserve this for future reference and write us for samples or further information.

S. M. ROTHSCHILD.

The rapid growth and development of the Northwest has enriched the country at large; Villages and Cities have sprung up by the thousands; Chicago, as the Metropolis of the West, ranks third as a commercial centre in the Union; our rigid winters and sudden changes of temperature necessitate a natural desire for food, shelter, and clothing. Now that the Presidential election at issue is soon coming to a close and the cold Winter stares us in the face, the next great question arises,

WHERE SHALL WE BUY OUR DRY GOODS?

In this enlightened age and free country every adult is at liberty to go where he pleases; the city is adorned with two hundred and forty-six Dry-Goods Stores. A few are large wholesale houses, but a large majority are retail stores; some say they have "Palaces of Trade," others are styled "Dry-Goods Princes." In late years the Dry-Goods stores have been adulterated with all sorts of rattle traps, such as toys, chamber-sets, patent medicines, millinery, ready-made clothing, museums, and even living curiosities! And when the sturdy pedestrian has been all around he will come to the sensible conclusion that

I KEEP THE ONLY DRY GOODS STORE IN CHICAGO!

The size of the store cuts no figure for the prudent purchaser to get suited in whatever one is in need of; to save the hard-earned money for a rainy day and old age is everybody's duty. Beware of firms who advertise one special article very cheap, to entice the unwary, and charge outlandish big profits on everything else. I defy competition in quoting such a long list of low prices as I publish below for the special benefit of our industrious shoppers, or show the public such a Magnificent Mammoth Stock of Dry Goods. No trouble or expense is shirked to please everybody; no trouble to show goods to customers, may they be rich or may they be unfortunately poor. To please and give satisfaction to everybody is my motto. Is the eager bargain-hunter exhausted walking around the city? has priced and looked at goods to his heart's content? then let him send to New York, Boston, or Philadelphia for samples, and then come to me and

I Will Save You Lots of Money!

CHICAGO.

The City Goes Democratic by a Decided Majority—Harrison Leads Cleveland.

Some of the Following Ones Not Heard by Only One Hundred Votes.

Assuring the Return of Buckpasture By Three Jubilant and Demented.

THE RESULT.

CITY AND COUNTY.

A RAIN-WAVE PROVES AN EFFECTIVE OBSTACLE.

Returns from the city district went in slowly last night, owing to the heavy rain pelting and the weakness from an hot-stew. From the returns received up to a late hour it was evident to all whether Blaine or Cleveland had carried the county. With 18 out of the 19 city precincts heard from Hyde had 37,307 to 36,331 for Cleveland. There is no doubt, however, but our outside the strong Republican and the strong Democratic wards. With the same proportion vote kept up Hyde would carry the county by a 100 majority. Farmers are about of the town, and the city precincts giving him 37,307 to 37,000 for Cleveland. Cleveland will probably have a majority in the county and get the Democratic county candidates brought into him.

THE CONGRESSIONAL.

The Republicans lost one Congressman on the result of their control in the First District, their being no doubt as to the election of Owen Ward over Simon and Fleischmann. In the Second District is again by between 500 Cochran in the First and Second are reckoned by handsome majorities.

THE LEGISLATIVE CONTINUES.

It is impossible to tell what the Legislative vote will be. Crawford, Republican, is sure of getting the Senatorship from the Second District, and Lorenz's prospects are good in the Sixth.

Owing to the Republican split on the West Side the result in the Fourth is in doubt, but the chances in favor of the Democrats.

BLAINE ON GARFIELD

Full Text of the Eloquent Memorial Oration on the Dead President.

The Ancestors of Garfield—Early Life—Military Career—In Congress.

Tom Ewat Lecture—The Administration—Guiteau and Piatt—The Assassin—The Death.

In response to many requests, THE TRIBUNE prints the eloquent eulogy on the martyred President Garfield delivered before both Houses of Congress and the high officials of the Government by James G. Blaine, Jr., U. S. S., the text of the memorial oration is as follows:

Mr. President: For the second time in the presence of the great Representative body of the American people, and of the high officials of the Nation, I am called to perform the mournful duty of announcing the death of a President of the United States. Another has fallen by the hand of an assassin. Another has been added to the long list of our martyred Presidents. Another has been enrolled in the sad catalogue of those who have died by violence. Another has been numbered with those who have fallen by the red hand of murder. Another has been added to the illustrious company of those who have given their lives for their country. Another has been offered as a sacrifice on the altar of human liberty. Another has been sacrificed to the fierce spirit of anarchy which growing in intensity and boldness from year to year, has at last reached the culminating crime of the century by striking down the President of the United States.

Garfield's early life was typical with an ordinary American boy. There would be but little to record in the annals of biography were it not for the splendid use which he made of every opportunity for improvement which presented itself. Left fatherless at the age of two years, he was reared in the humble home of a widowed mother, who, by her rare qualities of mind and heart, exerted over him that influence which is recognized universally as the source of the highest inspiration. Descended from the sturdy stock which settled New England, inheriting the iron will and the invincible courage which characterized the Puritan, he was enabled to lay the foundation of his character in those elements of force which are universally recognized as the essential constituents of manhood. Deprived of the opportunity of attending school, he was taught to read by his mother from the Bible, and through life he was a constant student of that book. Destitute of pecuniary means, he was enabled to secure a few months of attendance each year at the district school, walking a distance of two miles night and morning, summer and winter, through frost and snow, to the log schoolhouse. Fortunately for him, the teacher was a superior man, and finding the pupil more than ordinarily bright, he gave him special attention, and encouraged him to prepare for the high school at Chester. To reach this school he walked every day a distance of eight miles, and returned home in the evening to resume his work on the farm. Before he was seventeen he had determined to get a college education, and had laid his plans accordingly. He had no resources except his own strong will, his active mind, and his healthy body. He was determined to secure the first, and he knew that the last two were the best guarantees for success. He was ambitious to excel in his studies, and was resolved to make the most of his opportunities. He remembered that Webster had said that "Knowledge is power," and he had observed that the men who had enlarged the boundaries of human knowledge, who had stamped their impress upon their age and generation, were those who had enjoyed the best educational advantages. He was accustomed to say that he would rather be a poor man in a log cabin, with a chance to get knowledge, than to be the owner of a palace, and have no chance to get knowledge. He was not content with the ordinary curriculum of the district school, but he was constantly reading such books as he could get, and devouring such knowledge as he could find. He was fortunate in having access to a small library, which had been collected by a literary association of the neighborhood, and he made the most of it. He was also fortunate in having a few months' instruction in a private academy at Nesson, which was taught by a graduate of Dartmouth College, and which was under the influence of that institution. He was prepared for Williams College, and entered there in the autumn of 1851, graduating in 1856, with the highest honors of his class. He was a leader in his class, and was recognized as the most brilliant scholar in college. He was also prominent in athletic sports, and was fond of boating, which he practiced with great success. He was a member of the Philomathean Society, and was accustomed to speak frequently in its meetings. He was also a member of the Athenian Society, and was one of its most active members. He was a constant reader in the college library, and was familiar with the best literature of the day. He was graduated with honor, and delivered the valedictory address to his class. He was then twenty-four years of age, and had received a liberal education. He had been poor, and had known what it was to struggle for the means of support. He had been compelled to teach in the district school during the winter months, and had thus earned money enough to pay his way through college. He had been compelled to work on the farm during the summer months, and had thus earned money enough to pay his way through college. He had been compelled to work on the canal during the summer months, and had thus earned money enough to pay his way through college. He had been compelled to work on the railroad during the summer months, and had thus earned money enough to pay his way through college. He had been compelled to work on the steamboat during the summer months, and had thus earned money enough to pay his way through college.
